

MACKEREL PLENTY.

Twenty-Six Nice Fares Reach New York To-day.

Liberal Receipts Also at Newport and New Bedford.

Our New York correspondent wires that to-day is probably the climax and that hereafter the receipts there will be light. The bulk of the fish have gone by and half the netters have gone east. The market opened at 10 cents each for large and 6 cents for small, but may not clean up at that. The fish are still in small schools and wild as previously reported and were taken off Fire Island. Following are the arrivals:

Seiners.

- Sch. Marguerite Haskins, Capt. Benj. Spurling, 125 barrels mixed fresh mackerel, over half large.

The fish started at 12 and 7 cents for large and mediums and then dropped to 10 and 6 cents.

The committee on ordinances will meet this evening.

Sch. Richard Wainwright, Capt. Thaddeus Morgan, arrived from the south seining this morning to fit for Cape Shore. She had 20 barrels of fresh mackerel, which sold to the Gloucester Fresh Fish Co. at 10 cents each for large and 7 cents for mediums.

Capt. Morgan reports that the spring has been one of the most severe ever experienced out south, the fleet encountering a regular succession of gales, fog and heavy easterly wind, all of which greatly interfered with fishing operations and without doubt prevented many big hauls.

The first fish of the season were taken in latitude 36.10 north in 18 fathoms of water and about 25 miles off shore. From that the fleet followed the fish up the shore and were operating on small schools between Fire Island and Barnegat when the Wainwright left for home Sunday night.

The first hauls were made in the night, but the recent catches were made in the day. The fish now are in small schools, 50 barrels and less, spread out all over the water and chasing wildly after live feed, making them very difficult to catch.

Capt. Morgan says that these small schools are reported all the way from No Man's Land to Cape Henry. He does not think they are a part of the big body of fish out of which the fleet got their first and second trips. These fish were 32 miles off shore and were all mediums, while the schools taken recently were found way in shore, in sight of land, and had considerable many large fish mixed in with them. Capt. Morgan thinks that the big body of fish first struck were driven off shore by the bad weather and went by unnoticed.

The fish now do not show in the night, and Capt. Morgan thinks these small schools now coming along and reported over such a stretch of water is another body of fish from that first encountered in such large rafts by the early seiners.

He thinks there will be quite a large fleet on the Cape Shore this spring, as many of the captains are getting disgusted chasing these small wild schools, and prefer to take chances of big schools on Cape Shore. Capt. Morgan says that schs. Grayling and Lottie G. Merchant
